

For those who really want to see Nathan Fillion re-team with director Joss Whedon for a future Avengers film, you may be disappointed. Speaking with Digital Spy, Fillion (who previously worked with Whedon on Firefly, Serenity and Buffy The Vampire Slayer) was asked about his possible involvement with the already announced sequel to Marvel's The Avengers, and he suggests that he may not be "famous enough" for such a role. "I have to be honest. The entertainment industry is an industry. I love telling stories but finance does meet art. If I were in charge of an Avengers sequel I would be very concerned about what kind of money I could make back overseas, and these kinds of things. I'm not quite at that level yet where I could just be plopped in there but I'm getting there." The actor (who also stars in the television series Castle) added, "I've had more

Read more: <http://www.comicbookmovie.com/fansites/BatFreak/news/?a=63396>