

If this sounds familiar, like you've heard this same story just over a year ago, then don't worry you're not crazy. Brian Fuller last season had tried to reboot the classic 60's comedy. A pilot was ordered, but the first script was less than satisfactory, so NBC didn't move ahead. In the past year things have changed as the new NBC chief Bob Greenblatt took over the network, and decided to keep The Munsters alive. Apparently Fuller has worked out the kinks in the initial script, and all steam ahead. The Munsters was a classic 1960's television show that only last for two seasons. The show starred; Fred Gwynne as Herman Munster, Al Lewis as Grandpa Munster, Yvonne De Carlo as Lily Munster, Butch Patrick as Eddie Munster and Pat Priest as Marilyn Munster. It came out right around the same time The Adam's Family. Both shows shared short runs
