

You know being the first humans to come into contact with an alien creature seems like a pretty big deal, but in the theatrical cut of Prometheus it was treated like no big thang. Add in the fact that the discovery was made by scientists, you'd have to think they would know the value of such a moment, but for some odd reason they are ho-hum. The clip below finally shows the characters drinking in the importance of the situation. It just makes you scratch your head yet again as another key piece of footage was inexplicably cut from the film. So far I've seen at least three other deleted scenes that would've helped flesh out the movie. And the blame has to rest upon the film's editor, Pietro Scalia, who is also responsible for mangling Marc Webb's The Amazing Spider-Man. Now I haven't seen the deleted scenes for that film
