

Wonder Woman is easily the most well know and arguably popular comic book character not to have a movie based on her exploits. This year marks the character's 70th anniversary and aside from a couple of rumors and half assed hints that doesn't seem any closer to becoming a reality. In the pages of DC's New 52 Brian Azzarello and Cliff Chiang have been doing a great job with Wonder Woman, while also tweaking her origins a little. In a great, in depth interview with The LA Times' Hero Complex the duo discuss this, but also give their thoughts on why it has taken so long, and what some of the problems may be in adapting Wonder Woman for the screen. Here is an excerpt from the interview.. GB: Superman and Batman are taking flight again on the big screen but Wonder Woman is still waiting her turn. It sort of boggles

Read more: http://www.comicbookmovie.com/fansites/rorschachsraints/news/?a=49389&t=New_52_Wonder_Woman_Team_Give_Their_Thoughts_On_Why_We_Havent_Seen_Her_On_The_Big_Screen_Yet