

Speaking to THR about a number of topics, Gary Marsh, the president of Disney Channels Worldwide revealed an interesting sliver of info about what's coming down the pipeline on the animated Marvel front. THR: Because Marvel is now part of Disney, are you looking into more Avengers series? Marsh: Two months ago, we launched Marvel Universe on Disney XD, which became the exclusive home for new Marvel television content. We've developed Ultimate Spider-Man. Subsequent to the success of the Avengers movie, we've been developing a new Avengers Assemble. We're talking about a Hulk series and an Iron Man series, too. They're going to spend $150 million to $200 million to make these [movie] properties and then half of that to market them; I'm sitting here thinking, "Thank you, Lord, you've made me look good." It's probably safe to assume that the Hulk series is most likely Hulk and the Agents of S.M.A.S.H. but so

Read more: <http://www.comicbookmovie.com/fansites/GraphicCity/news/?a=62129>