

Though we did pay a visit to Wakanda in Captain America: Civil War, we only got a very brief glimpse of a foggy jungle region as Cap and T'Challa looked out a window during the mid-credits scene. However, thanks to some new concept art from Andrew Leung, we can get a much better idea of the designs that were envisioned for the film. The images feature a glimmering, futuristic-looking city (presumably capital of Birnin Zana) surrounded by lakes, in the middle of gigantic valley. Could this stunning work inform the design for Wakanda in the solo Black Panther movie? It's possible, but chances are they'll be starting from scratch, maybe only taking influence from a particular aspect here and there. Captain America: Civil War is out now on Blu-ray and DVD, while Black Panther claws its way into theaters on February 16, 2018.

Read more: https://www.comicbookmovie.com/captain_america/captain_america_civil_war/new-captain-america-civil-war-concept-a147795