

Roughly two months from it's anticipated release, Sony Pictures' Ghost Rider: Spirit Of Vengeance sequel hasn't been heavy with promotion lately, other than placing standees in theaters giving general audiences a heads ups. And now, a familiar-looking poster has apparently been spotted, via StarkIndRU, with a new trailer rated and classified via Alberta Film Ratings. There's no word on when to expect the trailer exactly, but they usually appear on Alberta Film Ratings a week ahead of time, if not sooner. In the meantime, we have other upcoming trailers to hold us over, including The Dark Knight Rises & Men In Black 3. Ghost Rider: Spirit Of Vengeance picks up where it's been several years since making a deal with the Devil and Johnny Blaze, living in self-imposed isolation, finds himself as the only person who can help save 10-year-old Danny – and ultimately the world – thanks to his unwanted and
