

Powerless has become a totally different TV show since that first trailer leaked online last year, as the promo below makes it clear that we're no longer getting a workplace comedy similar to The Office (which just so happens to be set in a world of superheroes). Instead, it looks like a much wackier comedy as the claim adjusters now spend their time creating inventions to help protect regular folk. Among the changes is a move to Wayne Security, while a new character has also been added as you can see on the poster below. It looks like NBC has totally reshot the pilot shown to fans at last year's San Diego Comic-Con, and that could be because it was met with a fairly tepid response. Whether or not this fairly drastic change in approach will work remains to be seen, but it looks pretty good so far. What do you guys think about Powerless so far?
