

Powerless didn't get off to the start it was likely hoping for last night, pulling in just around 3.1 million viewers for its premiere episode with 1.1 million in the lucrative 18-49 demo, although those numbers do place it above nearly every DCTV show on the CW, save for The Flash. However, since CW shows do tend to operate on a different scale, it's a little bit uncertain how NBC must be reacting to the premiere numbers at the moment. Next week's episode should be a better indicator of how the rest of the season may play out for the Powerless team and luckily, the second episode does seem a bit more promising with Emily Locke attempting to steer her team away from their Fantasy Super Hero League.
