

It'll probably be a few weeks before Warner Bros. decides to roll out the final trailer for Wonder Woman, which should shed some light on the film's plot & villains, but thanks to photos of a pair of upcoming action figures, it looks like we may have just received a slightly more concrete confirmation, following last month's interview snippet, that Ares is indeed the main villain in the upcoming Patty Jenkins-directed feature. The two images feature first looks at the packaging of a Diana of Themyscira figure and a Steve Trevor figure, but the most interesting part of both is seen tucked away in the corner. It's what appears to be a piece of Ares' battle armor and it can be connected together with the other five (if you collect them all) to form the nefarious God of War. It's still uncertain who is portraying Ares, or whether or not he will be an entirely CGI creation, but there are a number of candidates from

Read more: https://www.comicbookmovie.com/wonder\_woman/new-wonder-woman-toys-strongly-support-claims-that-ares-is-the-main-a148621