

While fan-favorite X-Men character Cable won't be making his cinematic debut until Deadpool 2 releases in 2018, a new fan film may just tide you over until then! Cable: Chronicles of Hope is short film written, directed, and produced by George & Harry Kirby, co-directed by Nathan Stickley, and produced by K&K Productions. The film debuted yesterday at the MCM London Comic-Con, and features the time travelling mutant in a short story inspired by the 2010 "Second Coming" crossover event. In addition to Cable, the film features other X-Men favorites such as Hope Summers, Bishop, and Nightcrawler. Cable's inclusion in the Deadpool sequel has been rumored to be a factor in director Tim Miller's departure from the project. 20th Century Fox is still seeking a director to helm the film, with John Wick co-director David Leitch as the reported frontrunner. Would you ever want to see a film focused on Cable? Let us know in the comments.

Read more: <https://www.comicbookmovie.com/x-men/new-x-men-fan-film-imagines-a-bleak-past-with-a-time-travelling-cable-and-a146408>