

During this years SDCC we've heard Nic Cage talk a little bit about Ghost Rider: Spirit of Vengeance but in this lengthy interview with the folks over at ShockTillYouDrop he goes into some more details on the film, including creating a specific body language and style of movements for the actual Ghost Rider himself, performing more practical stunts, bringing the more darker qualities of the character to life, and at the end he even briefly reveals whether he would return for another National Treasure movie. Here's a few excerpts from the interview but be sure to watch the video for the full thing: "In this one it's more like he's been living with it for a while and it's taken it's toll on him, making him more edgier, more sarcastic, hopefully still funny but more sarcastic." "One of the other things this movie gave me the chance to do that I didn't get to

Read more: http://www.comicbookmovie.com/fansites/Dustin03Comics/news/?a=42828&t=Nic_Cage_On_The_Process_Of_Making_IGhost_Rider_Spirit_Of_Vengeancei