

Yesterday afternoon, New York Comic Con had a panel for Legendary Comics, which made their first appearance ever at the event. The panel was hosted by Chris Hardwick, and it included Bob Schreck, the editor-in-chief of Legendary Comics and fan favorite writers Frank Miller, Paul Pope and Matt Wagner. The audience then got their chance to ask a few questions about the comics on the panel, and one of the responses was Miller's confirmation of new Sin City Comic Books: "There will be Sin City stories and I have every intention of doing them with Dark Horse." Could this surprising development mean these new comics may tie in with the (supposedly) upcoming Sin City 2?
