

Matthew Vaughn's X-Men: First Class was widely panned by fanboys and casual movie goers alike while it was in development. Much to everyone's surprise, the movie was quite good and performed very well at the box office. Naturally, Fox Studios is thinking franchise and the actors have been discussing the planned trilogy all summer long. Discussing it with Collider and Hero Complex, James McAvoy stated: "Ideally you have a story arc that lasts three movies and at the end of the third it leaves you ready for the story in X-Men 1. It would be nice to explore things in two more films. I've lots of ideas. I know Michael[Fassbender] and I are very much on the same page all the time and we'll be weighing in to protect that relationship between the two characters. The next movie, if there is one, shouldn't just start off with them

Read more: http://www.comicbookmovie.com/fansites/GraphicCity/news/?a=43816&t=OPINION_POLL_Villain_In_X-Men_First_Class_Sequel