

Deadline is reporting that it is now likely that Noah, the upcoming adaptation of the classic Bible story by Darren Aronofsky, which will also be a graphic novel- will land at Paramount instead of bidding opponent 20th Century Fox. Below are the details... Paramount is moving closer to signing on for Noah, the big-ticket re-telling of the Noah's Ark story that will be the next film from Black Swan director Darren Aronofsky. Bidding came down to 20th Century Fox and Paramount, both of which were vying to partner with New Regency, which has been involved all the way through the process. Deadline goes on to say that, although New Regency is working closer with Fox, but it's still likely either way that Paramount will be involved in the project. Which company do you think should gain the distribution rights for the flick? With Christian Bale reportedly in talks for the title role, it's currently

Read more: <http://www.comicbookmovie.com/fansites/BatFreak/news/?a=40527&t=Paramount Pictures Close To Picking Up Darren Aronofskys INoah>