

Paul Dano is a big fan of Akira, and has spoke at length about some of the changes he was unhappy with in the final script for the planned live action version at Warner Bros. - such as having Kaneda and Tetsuo be brothers etc. The There Will Be Blood/Little Miss Sunshine actor has confirmed that he was indeed up for the second lead role of Tetsuo in the movie, before WB pulled the plug - or at least, shelved it for the time being. Now while speaking to The Playlist, Dano says he was actually in talks for the role with more than one director, and says he would be "more than game" to return to the project, once the right man was on board to ensure things ran smoothly.. "I had a... thing on the 'Akira' thing. It's somewhat nebulous, since 'Akira' never got made. I truthfully feel awkward speaking
