

Last we heard about the animated adaptation of the Dark Horse-published comic series The Goon, producer David Fincher said a month ago that it was being developed, but that the budget still needed to be worked out. But now, actor Paul Giamatti - who has been set to voice 'Frankie' in the film - was recently asked while at the Sundance Film Festival about the status of the project, and what he said didn't sound too hopeful concerning the future of the film. "I have no idea what the hell happened," Giamatti bluntly said. "I asked and no one knows. I guess they just ran out of money." Share your thoughts below in the usual place. And for comments from Giamatti on Rock Of Ages, click the link below. Follow @PaulRomCBM

Read more: http://www.comicbookmovie.com/fansites/BatFreak/news/?a=53448&t=Paul_Giamatti_Uncertain_About_The_Future_Of_THE_GOON