

Marvel and DC. Two of the greatest companies ever created. Since the release of Superman in 1978, Comic Book Movies have become a regular Hollywood trend. All through the 80's and 90's, Batman and Superman were the only CBM's being produced, until Marvel sold off the rights to some of their characters to get them out of Bankruptcy. New Line Cinema's Blade was released in 1998 to critical acclaim from critics and fans alike, and the future looked bright for Comic Book Movies. After the critical and commercial failure Batman and Robin was released, it looked like the Batman franchise had been killed for good. DC were struggling to get new movies off the ground with many Batman and Superman movies in development but eventually scrapped. Meanwhile, Marvel were doing great with Sony making hit Spider-Man movies, Fox making X-Men and Fantastic Four movies and many other projects in development with
