

With modern day bookends and a story which, over the course of a few years, sees Steve Rogers go from being too sickly to join the army all the way to becoming Captain America and facing off against the Red Skull, Captain America: The First Avenger has a lot of ground to cover. With this being Marvel's one and only chance to fully tell the WWII adventures of Cap (forgetting potential flashbacks in future instalments) it has to be done right. So, will they have enough time to do that? Well, according to Canadian site, Cineplex, the movie will have a running time of 2 Hours And 4 Minutes. So, that's 124 minutes compared to THOR's 114 and Iron Man's 126. With many complaining that the former was a little too short, here's hoping the extra 10 minutes make all the difference. Be sure to share your thoughts on this news in the

Read more: http://www.comicbookmovie.com/fansites/joshw24/news/?a=41105&t=Possible_Running_Time_For_iCaptain_America_The_First_Avenger_Released