

Look, we all know that LEGO sets aren't exactly too reliable, but they're at least occasionally based on actual solid information from a movie. If a new Instagram post (via Spider-Man News) is to be believed, Spider-Man: Homecoming will have only two, but they may get at least some way in shedding some light on what we should expect from the reboot which has frustratingly so far released nothing official. Set #1 seemingly features the wall-crawler taking down some bank robbers who will be dressed as members of The Avengers, and if that's in the movie, it should be a hell of a lot of fun. The second apparently confirms that Shocker will be showing up, but also seems to point to Tony Stark suiting up as Iron Man in order to help out Peter Parker in his battle against both that villain and The Vulture. Time will tell whether or not these are accurate, but for now, let us know your thoughts

Read more: <https://www.comicbookmovie.com/spider-man/possible-spider-man-homecoming-lego-set-descriptions-reveal-some-a147189>