

2017 is going to be a big test for Warner Bros. and their DC Films Universe. Wonder Woman needs to be a success, and if Justice League goes wrong, who knows what the ramifications for these characters will be moving forward. In many ways, 2018 is equally as significant though, especially as the studio looks to launch two new franchises with Aquaman and The Flash. The latter has already lost its director due to "creative differences", and fans are hoping that James Wan stays committed to the former. Well, in an extremely positive update, we now know that pre-production will begin in Queensland, Australia later this month. That's according to Gold Coast Bulletin, but don't expect to see any photos just yet as sets for Thor: Ragnarok need to be taken apart and removed before Aquaman can start shooting. The site adds that that is set to take place in the New Year, so we don't have long to wait! So far, the

Read more: <https://www.comicbookmovie.com/aquaman/pre-production-on-james-wans-aquaman-set-to-begin-in-australia-later-this-a146581>