

DC Collectibles introduced a new line of 3 3/4" action figures at this year's San Diego Comic-Con. This is the companies first foray into this particular scale. The initial press release for the figures announced that they would only be available at select conventions and shows throughout the year. During San Diego Comic-Con, DC Collectibles revamped that statement and said that the Convention would be a test-bed for the line. If the line received a positive reaction during the four days of Comic-Con, then they would go forward with production of more Green Lantern related figures with the possibility of expanding the line to other DC Universe characters as well as selling them outside of conventions. The overall consensus at SDCC was very positive according to representatives from DC Collectibles that were at the convention. There was no official confirmation of any figures produced after New York
