

Earlier this week Liefeld announced via Twitter that he was leaving DC Comics. The 2012 September zero issues for all three of titles; "Deathstroke", "Grifter" and "Savage Hawkman" would be his last for the company. "Reasons are the same as everyone's that you hear. I lasted a few months longer than I thought possible... Massive indecision, last minute and I mean LAST minute changes that alter everything. Editor pissing contests" He then wrote a much more detailed account of the issues that he faced while working at DC Comics, which you read by clicking here. But wait, there's more! The trainwreck just keeps chugging along as Scott Snyder contacted Liefeld via private messages on Twitter, which Rob posted part of in the images you see below, and then the two took the battle public. Rob Liefeld: It's not you. It never has been. It's Batman. Scott Snyder: I can assure you batman doesn't sell the

Read more: <http://www.comicbookmovie.com/fansites/nailbiter111/news/?a=66312>