

Recently speaking with the L.A. Times' Hero Complex, 'Tony Stark' actor Robert Downey Jr. discussed his reprisal in the forthcoming Iron Man 3 movie. Ultimately dishing on the transition from previous director of the franchise, Jon Favreau, to it's new helmer, Shane Black, check out what Downey had to say. On returning for the third installment... "My sense of it is that we need to leave it all on the field — whatever that means in the end," Downey said of the May 2013 film. "You can pick several different points of departure for that." On Shane Black's directorship and their Kiss Kiss Bang Bang connection... "The thing about Shane is that it will be anything but one of those moments," Downey said, "unless we come up with something that is so cheeky and character-driven and perfect that it has to be in the movie." "He's more than the sum of his parts and he's also
