

Robert Kirkman, Executive Producer, of The Walking Dead recently chatted with Collider about the hit TV series. Here a a couple of excerpts from the interview. On how life has changed since The Walking Dead has become a hit: "Not very much. I guess in all of the obvious ways. I can afford more diapers for my children. If I want to buy a complete set of Garbage Pail Kids on Ebay I don't have to ask my wife so hard. For the most part, it's mostly the same. I keep my head down and I just work on comics for most of the time. I've relocated to Los Angeles to work on the second season. So I'm living there for year. I'm like on a trial basis. I'm going to the writer's room everyday and that is very different. Otherwise, I'm just working on comics, and that is pretty much the same." On

Read more: http://www.comicbookmovie.com/fansites/JakeLester/news/?a=34713&t=Robert_Kirkman_Talks_iThe_Walking_Deadi