

The mid-season finale of The Walking Dead finally answered a few questions for us, but it gave us a few new things to ponder over the next few months until the show returns. Show producer and comic book creator Robert Kirkman sat down with The Hollywood Reporter to answer a few questions regarding certain characters, death and future plans for story and character development. Here's a portion of the interview. Be sure to check out the link for the entire article, as it contains some very intriguing insights. THR: Sophia (Madison Lintz) was in the barn the whole time! How come Hershel never mentioned it? Robert Kirkman: I don't think that Hershel was ever doing a cataloging of the zombies. It was painful for him because his wife and son were also in the barn. It's not like he was actually hanging out in there or paying attention to all the walkers that were
