

After seeing Darth Vader's castle on Mustafar in Rogue One: A Star Wars Story, it's impossible not to wonder whether we might return there somewhere down the line. If the iconic villain gets his own movie, that's a given, but isn't it somewhere Kylo Ren might want to spend some time given his fascination with his grandfather? We'll have to wait and see, but during a recent interview with StarWars.com, co-production designer Doug Chiang explained the process of creating Vader's home. "Vader's castle was really fun. When I knew that we were going to possibly go back to Vader's castle, I loved that idea of, "Okay, let's establish Vader's home." The initial idea was, "Why would Vader live here?" In our minds, we started to come up with a little bit of a backstory. That perhaps this place had special meaning for him, and that this is where he comes to meditate and to heal himself. We started with the idea that maybe
