

Obviously if you haven't seen the episode yet, SPOILERS ahead. The story picks up pretty much immediately after last season's closer, as we catch up with the various characters scattered around Westeros. Dany and her newly hatched Dragons find themselves at the mercy of a seemingly endless desert, and along with Jorah Mormont and the rest of her "Kalasar" they must try to decide on the safest road forward. Tyrion returns to Kings' Landing as the new Hand Of The King, much to the chagrin of his sister Cersei who is gradually losing her motherly hold over the psychotic boy-King Joffrey. Elsewhere, Robb - still seeking vengeance for his Father Ned's execution - send his peace terms to the Lannisters, terms he knows well they will not accept. North of The Wall Jon Snow and the Nights' Watch take refuge at Craster's Keep. Craster, a Wildling, has a lot of daughters.
