

I should have hated Wrath Of The Titans. It's exactly the type of movie that would usually grind my gears and piss me off to the point that I can't wait for it to end. Basically, the one and only aspect of this film that anyone involved gave so much as a flying fuck about is the visuals. And I'm really not exaggerating. At some points it felt as if director Jonathan Liebsman was running around waving his hands and calling for his actors to phone it in more and spout even dumber dialog. Everyone just flings exposition at each other and stupidly repeat the names of places as they arrive to them to their companions. At one point Ares exclaims "Here we are, at Tartarus" or something to that effect, and I just wished Hades had of replied: "No shit asshole, I live here". The story is your basic "point
