

Speculation ran rampant a few weeks back when Deadpool star Ryan Reynolds shared a photo of himself sharing a laugh with fellow X-Men star Hugh Jackman (Logan) and former James Bond, Pierce Brosnan (The Foreigner). Considering the latter has literally no current ties to Fox's billion-dollar franchise, he was the focus of practically all discussion as many began to wonder whether he had been cast in the highly coveted role of Cable in the upcoming Deadpool sequel. Well, as it turns out, all that speculation may not have been entirely unfounded. Earlier today, during the latest episode of Popcorn Talk's weekly vodcast Meet The Movie Press, Forbes reporter Simon Thompson shared a few details from his very informative recent encounter with director David Leitch (who is helming Deadpool 2) at the world premiere of John Wick: Chapter 2. Thompson utilized an age-old tactic in trying to get Leitch to slip up and reveal any little nugget about the eagerly awaited sequel: "So I said, 'Congratulations on casting

Read more: https://www.comicbookmovie.com/deadpool/deadpool_2/rumor-former-007-pierce-brosnan-reportedly-in-early-a148678