

Posted last week, Modern Myth Media (who are loosely connected with Batman-On-Film) have run a story claiming to have been contacted by a source close to Warner Bros. who tells them that a big screen adaptation of Wonder Woman is still on track for release in 2013. While the report is far from definite, could this mean we'll see the DC heroine in cinemas alongside already confirmed Marvel Studios movies, Iron Man 3 and Thor 2. MMM has received word from a new source close to Warner Bros. indicating the studio is developing a Wonder Woman film for a potential 2013 release. While this new source appears to be legitimate, take this news with a grain of salt. Even our source admits that the project is in very early developmental stages, meaning that Warner Bros. is far off from actually committing to this production. Personally, I find it a little hard to believe
