

I still haven't seen this as it isn't released here until this coming Friday, but by all accounts it's every bit as good as the trailers suggested it would be. Or better. So I'm very excited. Anyway, Bleeding Cool caught up with the movie's director Rupert Wyatt and he gave them an insight into his thought process should he be involved with the bound to happen sequel.. There's so much we could do... The ideas I've had are all sorts of things, ranging from Full Metal Jacket with apes... you could start this story again eight years from where we left off, the next generation of apes, those that have come from our protagonists, perhaps going in to a conflict humans and showing real fear, in the same way as going into war for young soldiers in this day and age, telling their story. Or how apes are taking over cities, and

Read more: http://www.comicbookmovie.com/fansites/rorschachsrants/news/?a=43930&t=Rupert_Wyatt_Shares_His_Ideas_For_A_Rise_Of_The_Planet_Of_The_Apes_Sequel