

Fans were surprised and saddened to hear that Tim Miller had decided not to helm the sequel to Deadpool after doing such a great job on the first movie. We've been led to believe that the main reason for the departure had to do with creative differences between Miller and star/producer Ryan Reynolds, and in a new interview the actor offers his first comments on the matter. "All I can really add is that I'm sad to see him off the film," Reynolds admitted to GQ. "Tim's brilliant and nobody worked harder on Deadpool than he did." It's a very diplomatic response, but some of Reynolds' comments elsewhere in the interview definitely suggest that the pair clashed over what they felt was the right way to handle the character. I know when I need to exert control, and I know when I need to let go of it. I'm not gonna go and sit with Tim Miller and say, 'The visual effects

Read more: <https://www.comicbookmovie.com/deadpool/ryan-reynolds-finally-comments-on-director-tim-millers-departure-from-a146771>