

After the surprise success of Deadpool earlier this year, it's fair to say that the sequel is one of the most highly anticipated superhero movies coming our way over the next few years. While Fox has scheduled a number of upcoming Marvel adaptations, a specific date has not yet been given to the follow-up, but in a recent interview with Entertainment Weekly, Ryan Reynolds offered up an update of sorts. "We're just in the development stage but we're about to move into production," he revealed before confirming that they're currently casting Cable and are "looking at" adding fan-favourite Domino. After praising Deadpool director Tim Miller's hard work on the first movie, Reynolds went on to explain by John Wick's David Leitch was ultimately the right man to take over the job. "Everybody was just a fan of his work. He's just a guy who's so muscular with his action. He also really understands those Deadpool sensibilities and where we need to take the

Read more: <https://www.comicbookmovie.com/deadpool/ryan-reynolds-reveals-what-makes-david-leitch-the-right-choice-to-direct-a147378>