

Here's a surprise 20th Century Fox and Logan director James Mangold probably didn't want spoiled! According to The Wrap, Ryan Reynolds has shot something for the movie which will likely be used as an after-credits scene, and while they don't offer any specifics, it was Deadpool 2 director David Leitch who took the helm of that. It's clearly something which has been added fairly late in the game then. While it would be easy to start getting excited about some sort of Wolverine/Deadpool team-up, this scene could very well be totally unrelated to the events of Logan by setting up the events of the sequel. Sure, we could see the two iconic characters cross paths, but it will probably just be a tongue in cheek moment which doesn't really matter rather than the Merc with the Mouth showing up to help Wolverine and X-23 battle the Reavers. We'll just have to wait and see, but this news is still pretty exciting! What would you
