

As we all know, reviews and opinions on movies - and anything else for that matter - are completely subjective. But that doesn't stop fans lashing out when they see one they don't like. Now there's nothing wrong with a bit of friendly (or heated) debate on the issue if you disagree of course, but at what point does it go too far? Sam Jackson Tweeted the following after NY Times critic AO Scott's negative review of The Avengers.. "#Avengers fans, NY Times critic AO Scott needs a new job! Let's help him find one! One he can ACTUALLY do!" Harsh? Well, have a read of some of the things Scott said about the film and then make up your mind.. "While The Avengers is hardly worth raging about, its failures are significant and dispiriting. The light, amusing bits cannot overcome the grinding, hectic emptiness, the bloated cynicism that is less a shortcoming of

Read more: <http://www.comicbookmovie.com/fansites/rorschachsrrants/news/?a=59075>