

Deadline reported earlier this week that Paramount was planning on airing Super Bowl TV spots for three films from their upcoming slate, namely Transformers: The Last Knight, Life, and Ghost In The Shell. The first of the three spots landed early this morning and it's for Rupert Sanders' upcoming adaptation of the popular anime Ghost In The Shell, featuring 4x Golden Globe-nominee Scarlett Johansson (Avengers: Infinity War) as the Major kicking all sorts of ass as she attempts to reclaim the life that was stolen from her long ago. The spot is expected to air during Fox's pre-game coverage on Sunday night, so be sure to catch it then as you prepare to witness Tom Brady and the legendary New England Patriots take a shot at making history in a matchup of a lifetime against Matt Ryan and the high-scoring Atlanta Falcons. Check out the new Super Bowl TV spot below: Based on the internationally-acclaimed sci-fi property, "GHOST IN THE SHELL" follows the Major, a special ops, one-of-a-kind human-cyborg

Read more: https://www.comicbookmovie.com/anime_manga/scarlett-johansson-reclaims-what-was-stolen-from-her-in-this-sweet-a148619