

Out promoting the release of Doctor Strange on Blu-ray and DVD, director Scott Derrickson was inevitably asked to comment on the status of the sequel to his $660 million grossing Marvel debut. “I have no idea where it fits in,” he told the Entertainment Weekly. “I’ve sort of been off the grid. I very much needed a break after that. But I’m starting to read TV pilots. I love dramatic television, and I’ve gotten quite a few good offers on really good pilots. I may do a pilot before Doctor Strange 2, if Doctor Strange 2 is going to happen.” So does the current radio silence alarm Derrickson? Not one bit. “Right now, I don’t think the people at Marvel are calling anybody for anything. They’re making way too many movies at once right now [to do that]. [Given] how intimately involved they are in the development and shooting and post-production of those movies, they’ve got their hands very full right now.” Given

Read more: https://www.comicbookmovie.com/doctor_strange/scott-derrickson-says-marvel-is-too-busy-with-black-panther-and-a148497