

During Entertainment Weekly's San Diego Comic-Con celebration, MTV News caught up with the director of next summer's most-anticipated film The Avengers, Joss Whedon. Ultimately discussing how well the ensemble cast work together, and how it effects their performances on and off set, watch the brief video chat below! Get More: Movie Trailers, Movies Blog "I hate those guys!" he joked. "They are bastard men. No, it's a lovely troupe and each individually has so much to give. But maybe the best part, apart from them actually listening to me is that they are there for each other so much. When they're conflicting or supposed to be best friends, they're worst enemies, whatever it is, they'll come up for the other guy." "You always hear movie stars, they're off camera, they stay in their trailers, these guys are so present," Whedon said. "You feel that in every take. It's so gratifying to know that there
