

Chatting with MovieLine at the San Diego Comic-Con, Avi Arad, producer of all Marvel comic-book-adaptated films, including Spider-Man, X-Men, and the Studios' independently-produced films Iron Man, Thor, and next summer's The Avengers, to name a few, dotted on the ultimate story of the Joss Whedon-directed movie and more. "Well, it takes some careful architecture but in its core it's natural. First, the people — the superpowers, the uniforms, are all metaphors for a lot more than that. But it's a team. A team of people who, maybe some of them believe in the same thing, maybe all believe in the same thing, but they all have different ways of going about it. And then they're human beings, so they compete, they dislike, they get hurt, they fall in love... so as long as the actors feel that they're excited and they have enough to do. X-Men was the best teacher. I love

Read more: http://www.comicbookmovie.com/fansites/MarvelFreshman/news/?a=42875&t=SDCC_11_Producer_Avi_Arad_Weighs_In_On_iThe_Avengersi