

Speaking to Examiner, Sebastian Stan - who plays Bucky Barnes in the soon to be released Captain America: The First Avenger - talks about working with a huge studio like Paramount (in contrast to his previous film, Black Swan, which was more of an independent film), saying that filming Captain America is 'a different world' for him. He also addresses the possibility of Bucky Barnes becoming Captain America in the MCU, saying he'd love to take on the role but the MCU timeline is currently in the present. You did Black Swan, which was a big film but none the less an independent film. Now you've done Captain America with Paramount which is a huge studio. How do they compare? It's a different world. Black Swan was more intimate, but there was less time to get the film made. Captain America took five months to shoot. There was also all the CGI

Read more: <http://www.comicbookmovie.com/fansites/BatFreak/news/?a=41925&t=Sebastian Stan Talks ICaptain America The First Avenger>