

With production wrapped on the seventh season of HBO's hit fantasy series Game of Thrones, the show's actors have really been cleaning up across town, nabbing key roles in a number of upcoming big-budget projects. The latest is Alfie Allen, who The Hollywood Reporter has learned has joined the cast of Shane Black's The Predator. He'll portray an ex-Marine, who will team-up with a handful of other outsiders to stop the highly-trained alien killers. Allen joins a cast headlined by Boyd Holbrook (Logan), who will lead the team of ex-Marines. The supporting players consist of Trevante Rhodes (Moonlight), Keegan-Michael Key (Keanu), Olivia Munn (X-Men: Apocalypse), Sterling K. Brown (Black Panther), Jacob Tremblay (Room), and Thomas Jane (The Punisher). Black, who starred in the original, is directing the latest installment with a script he co-wrote with Fred Dekker (Edge). Production kicked off this past Monday. So, what do you guys think?
