

The Hollywood Reporter has just learned that Primetime Emmy winner Sterling K. Brown has entered talks with 20th Century Fox to join the cast of Shane Black's upcoming reboot/sequel of The Predator. He joins a cast headlined by Boyd Holbrook (Logan), who will star as an ex-Marine. The supporting players consist of Trevante Rhodes (Moonlight), Keegan-Michael Key (Keanu), and Olivia Munn (X-Men: Apocalypse). Black is directing with a script he co-wrote with Fred Dekker (Edge). Details on Brown's role were fairly vague, but if his deal closes, he'll portray a government agent that will throw Holbrook's character in jail at the start of the picture, but then later recruit him when the Predators strike. Both Rhodes & Key will also play ex-Marines, while Munn will be seen playing a scientist. Brown currently stars on the hit NBC family drama series This Is Us and is probably best known to audiences for his Emmy-winning performance last year as Christopher Darden on The People v. O.J. Simpson: American Crime Story. His numerous other credits

Read more: <https://www.comicbookmovie.com/action/shane-blacks-the-predator-looks-to-add-this-is-us-black-panther-star-a148316>