

In an interview with Collider, Showtime President of Entertainment David Nevins provided the following, brief update on development of the Vertigo comic. How is development going on 100 Bullets? What has that process of adapting a comic book been like for you? NEVINS: I always get a lot of questions about 100 Bullets. We're in it right now and working on the script, and I think it's a very interesting idea for a television series. We're not ready to make a move just yet, but it's an important piece for us. It was recently reported a few months back that David S. Goyer was developing the show for Showtime. Specifically, Goyer would serve as writer and executive producer of the drama series based on the Eisner and Harvey Award-winning comic book that published 100 issues between 1999 and 2009. The series was created by Brian Azzarello and illustrated by Eduardo Risso, who

Read more: http://www.comicbookmovie.com/fansites/GraphicCity/news/?a=43754&t=emShowtimeem_Exec_Briefly_Updates_Status_of_em100_Bulletsem_Adaption