

Speaking with Bad Taste, actress Sigourney Weaver talks about her involvement with the upcoming sequels to Avatar, the 2009 sci-fi film directed by James Cameron which is now the highest grossing film of all time. Originally confirmed by Cameron himself that Weaver will return for the first sequel, the actress also confirmed that she'll reprise her role of 'Grace Augustine' in both follow-ups, while also saying that she's read early drafts for the sequels. She also comments on what the sequels will explore, in addition to when Cameron will begin filming. "I read early versions of the script, but I can not say anything else James Cameron comes here and kills me. I can say that I'll be in both, we will turn them one after another and explore worlds that were not touched in the first episode... What is certain is that Cameron will begin filming in the new Avatar
