

Now that we know Matthew Vaughn's X-Men: First Class sequel will be titled X-Men: Days of Future Past, the only major question remaining is whether it will tackle time travel as the comic book arc it's name after did. Well, in a panel at the 2012 Montreal Comic Convention, Sir Patrick Stewart has once again teased that there are plans for him to reprise the role of Charles Xavier (despite the fact that James McAvoy is currently portraying a much younger version of the character). If time travel is used, it would make perfect sense for the older Professor X to return. Below is an excerpt from Newsarama's in-depth highlights from the panel. When asked directly by a fan during his Q&A panel, the Englishman gave a knowing smile and spoke the words many have been waiting to hear: "I think there is every possibility." He proceeded to enthusiastically run down the

Read more: <http://www.comicbookmovie.com/fansites/JoshWildingNewsAndReviews/news/?a=67860>