

After the success of Michael Bay's Transformers trilogy, Paramount Pictures will inevitably continue making films for some time. Bay confirmed that his next entry in the franchise (which bows June 27th, 2014) will certainly be his last, and even stated that Transformers 4 will set things up for the next director. Personally, I would prefer if Paramount completely rebooted the franchise. The Transformers movies have been very entertaining, but they're far from the best versions of the robots (too much focus on the humans, very poor attempts at humor, etc). I would love to see a prequel/reboot (in the vein of Rise Of The Planet Of The Apes, Star Trek and X-Men: First Class) which follows the War For Cybertron storyline. To successfully craft a Transformers movie, you need to make the characters likable and the visuals top notch. Below, I've listed six directors who I think can accomplish just that. Jon

Read more: <http://www.comicbookmovie.com/fansites/BatFreak/news/?a=67221>