

Source: ComingSoon.net via Bleeding Cool Here's a bit of hopeful news for all you 80's cartoon fans out there. While details are scarce, some key execs at both Sony and Escape Artist announced their continued partnership through 2015 and also announced a number of films they plan to make including a new take on He-Man. While details were not forthcoming at this time, it's a sign that things may finally be on track for He-Man to make a triumphant return to the big screen after the less than stellar 1987 take on the character starring Dolph Lundgren. Prior to this announcement, the last reported details on the project back in April of 2010 were that screenwriters Mike Finch (Predators 2010) and Alex Litvak (Predators 2010, The Three Musketeers 2011) would take a stab at the first draft of a script and that John Stevenson (Kung-Fu Panda) would direct the film. Above concept art

Read more: <http://www.comicbookmovie.com/fansites/GraphicCity/news/?a=51208&t=Sony Pictures And Escape Artists Moving Ahead With A Live-Action He-Man Movie>