

Big things are coming to The Walking Dead later this year based on the synopses below, and they're going to make comic book fans very happy. In episode six - titled "Swear" - it's said that, "Someone stumbles upon a brand new society, and this society is unlike anything seen before." This could be a nod to Oceanside, but that would mean the show is introducing them much earlier than the comics. Instead, it's likely that this is a reference to Rick Grimes stumbling across Ezekiel and The Kingdom. Episode seven meanwhile is titled "Sing Me A Song," and if you know anything about the comic books, you'll realise that's a reference to what happens after Carl sneaks into the Sanctuary and ends up being given a tour by Negan. The villain forces the youngster to remove his bandages and sing him a song, though it is of course possible that the captive Daryl will end up taking his place in this
