

TrekMovie has landed a couple of scoops for J.J. Abrams' highly anticipated sequel to his Star Trek reboot, which recently wrapped production. First up, the website has learned that Jason Matthew Smith - who played a security officer nicknamed "Cupcake" in the first movie - will reprise the role in the sequel. "Cupcake" first encountered James Kirk (Chris Pine) in a bar fight near the beginning of the first movie, which is where he received the nickname. He's later seen as a security officer who finds Kirk aboard the USS Enterprise after beaming up on the ship with Scotty. How large his role will be in the sequel is currently unknown (though it's said that he's still assigned to security aboard the Enterprise), and hasn't been officially confirmed by Paramount. Additionally, the character (who's also given the name "Mr. Hendorff") has appeared in IDW's current comic book series, and is an

Read more: <http://www.comicbookmovie.com/fansites/BatFreak/news/?a=60518>